13 second American to walk in space; he went on to serve as the lunar
14 module pilot for the Apollo 10 mission, which descended to within 15 eight nautical miles of the moon's surface and sent the first live
16 television pictures from lunar orbit; in 1972, he commanded Apollo 17 17, the final moon mission, and with his crewmate, spent more than 18 three days on the lunar surface; they completed three remarkable
19 excursions to craters and the Taurus-Littrow mountains, collecting 20 250 pounds of rock and soil samples; when he climbed back into the 21 module to depart, Captain Cernan became the last human to leave
22 footprints on the moon, and for the rest of his life, he continued
23 to advocate powerfully for the renewal of missions to other worlds; 24 and

1 WHEREAS, From 1973 until 1976, Captain Cernan assisted in the 2 development of the joint U.S.-Soviet Union Apollo-Soyuz mission; he 3 retired in 1976 and became executive vice president of Coral 4 Petroleum before establishing his own consulting company, the 5 Cernan Corporation; in addition, he coanchored ABC-TV coverage of 6 the space shuttle program and served as chair of Johnson
7 Engineering Corporation; he was inducted into the U.S. Space Hall
8 of Fame and received a host of other accolades, among them the Navy
9 Distinguished Flying Cross, an honorary doctorate of engineering
10 from Purdue University, and the 2016 Neil Armstrong Outstanding 11 Achievement Award from the National Aviation Hall of Fame; and
